Initial situation and objectives:

The growth of Golding Capital Partners prompted the move from a Munich city villa to three complete floors of the Bavaria Towers. This step was to be accompanied by creating optimal and appropriate working conditions – especially with regard to contemporary media technology in the various communication spaces. What stands out in this open space concept are the different smaller, functional “focus rooms” – transparent cubes designed as a-room-in-a-room. In addition, two floors include classic conference rooms in different sizes. Regardless of the size, all the rooms have a representative character and are equipped with state-of-the-art video conferencing technology.

Right: Small focus room with a meeting table and a UC Display column_W6 M, 90 cm body panel and 20 cm bezel plate.

As a retreat or for meetings for two, the small glass cubes distributed on the floors in the lounge style are ideal.

The UC Display column_W6 here enables the perfect, height-variable integration of displays and VC systems and stands out with its representative design.

Two different solutions were implemented for stand up meetings:

In the medium-sized room for 6 to 8 people, a free-standing high table_C12 and a Media column_W8 L invite you to creative meetings ...

“ In our new offices, we have paid particular attention to the design of the conference and retreat rooms. We wanted them to be technologically up-to-date and highly functional – but also to fit into the overall concept of our office.

We managed to do both! And we have to point out here the extraordinary, always constructive cooperation with Holzmedia, which proved to be impressively uncomplicated throughout the entire course of the project.”
